SCHWEISKINDO, PALLS OF THE RUNE. 2

Soptember 15, 1884. 3

How glad we were to get to the Schweiserhol on the 6th of September, tired out as we were with traveiling. Just after we arrived, and as we were regretting that it was too dark to see the far-fanned Falls, lo
a rocket, and then another, and then the Palls were all aglow with colored light.
The hine, foaming, dashing, spraying water plunging over the rocks, then the green,
then the pink, then the yellow, were really very inscinating, and in spite of our fatigue
we all became enthusiastic, Four masses of water pour over the rocks, then they unite into two streams, but we do not realize that till to-morrow, when we cross the bridge and stand close to the water.
At present we are absorbed in the rush
and the tumble and the roar. Such a roar!
Not as great, indeed, as at Niagara, but still great enough, and resembling the worst roar of the traffic of a buge city.
Now the water lies in darkness, but over the brink a fairy-like castle appears, first one color and then another. Suddenly all is dark again, and after a few minutes more orthus-same va disperse for the night. Up beone color and then another. Suddenly all is dark again, and after a few minutes more of enthusiasm we disperse for the night. Up betimes in the morning, and on waking we tancy ourselves back in New York; but no, it is only the rush of the Rhine in its fury. And how lovely it looks in the morning sun! Such a breadth of pure white foam, changing into blue-green water and again into purple, and once more into a blue that rivals a southern sky. One wonders at such a combination.

We are charmed with our hotel. It stands high up, and we breakfast with eyes turned to the view we have come to see.

stands high up, and we breakfast with eyes turned to the view we have come to see. We are waited on by girls in the picturesque dress of their canton—black skirts with rapings of scarlet veivet bodiess trimmed with silver ornaments, and chains and white lace, and long white sleeves, and chemisettes—good-tempered girls, and quiet as all the Swiss are. Opposite me at lable d'hôte sits an English lord (?), with his lady on one side and a friend on the other. He grumbles all the time and at every thing—grumbles because there is thick soup, and when they bring him thin grumbles at that. A luckless footstool happens to be under the table; up he gets, and prepares to shy it the length of the room; fortunately a waiter catches it en route. We all admire a flower-garden in the middle the string of white lace, and long white sleeves, and chanistics—good-tempered girks, and quiet as all the Swiss are. disdained to walk down to their horses, and had them brought up to their room doors instead. I was quite fortunate in seeing a detachment of pilgrims on their return from visiting the shrine of Einstedeln, famous for more than a thousand years. There were about 300 men and women taking leave of 200 other men and women who had come to a bramching-of point. Such gav, bright colors and variety of dress! Women with huge bows of broad black ribbon on their heads; women with high hats; women with flaps of black lace, others with red handkerchiefs on heer, when he were conceivable color, the latter almost large enough to be dress-skirts; then girts with their hair interplaited with white satin ribbon, and a huge buckle at the back of the head, or with broad ends as large as the lop of a Spanish comb. The crowd looked very gay in the sunshine. And such leave-takings and hand-shakings. For this bright picture the background was made by the men, who looked wretchedly squaliid and miserable; for the poor clothes worn by most of the intelligence which were redeemed by bits of color, were unrelieved in the men. Their faces seemed to express ignorance and stupidity, and none of the intelligence which were redeemed by bits of color, were unrelieved in the men. In spite of that the scene was so new and attractive that I waited for another set of cars to see it repeated. I talked with some of the people, and they told me they had had a good time and expected all sorts of blessings as a reward for their pilgrimage, which is now made very easy for them, as the railway goes to Einsiedeln, Most of the pilgrims seemed very much in earnest over the affair, though it is painful to think that numbers of them are paid to undertake the journey by the rich people, who are thus enabled to reap the benefits without trouble. Though, as the pay is real and the benefit possibly imaginary, they may in one sense be said to have the best of it. We leave this charming spot to-morrow with great regret, and after a six-hours' journey expect to be in Stuttgart.

STEERS ON THE RAMPAGE.

[New York Times.]

Two wild steers created the wildest commotion in the north section of lower Jersey City yesterday. It is not an unusual thing for droves of cattle to be driven through crowded thoroughfares in Jersey City to and from the Central Stock-Yards. It was from such a drove, headed for Newark, that the two steers broke vesterday after-from such a drove, headed for Newark, that the two steers broke yesterday afternoon.

From Sixth street, where the steers parted from the herd, they rushed wildly down Coles to Newark avenue, and thence to Monmouth, to Third, and mto Brunswick street. The crowd vanished before them, but a shouting party of men and boys made bedlam at their heels. They knocked down a young German and afterward an elderly geatleman who had his back turned to them, and one of them strode right over Anne Bentze, of No. 192 Sixth street. She is only five years old, and probably was too small to be seen by the erroged beast, which saved her from attack with his horns.

Two laddies on Brunswick street are said to have been knocked down by the animals, but their names could not be ascertained. On their way down through Grove street one of the steers gazed for a second on the stock of drugs displayed in Kennedy's store, at the corner of Seventh street, and then plunged his horns through the plate-glass window.

At Newark avenue and Second street one of them ran down Mrs. Perdue Van Tassel, of No. 24 Fifth street. She was thrown with such violence to the sidewalk that she became unconscious. She was carried into Cadmus's drugstore, at the gorner of Cole street and Newark avenue, and was restored to consciousness. She was in a delicate condition at the time of the assault, and her condition is more critical now. She refused to go to the hospital, and was carried bonc in a wagon.

The two beasts next encountered George Irie, a policy clerk, just as he steepped out of his office, and tossed bim into the middle of the street, At Monmouth street Matthew Clark, a laborer, living in Marrion, took a stand in front of them and waved his coat and plunged one of his horns into Clark's chest. He was taken to the hallway of McDonald's grocery-store and subsequently to the hospital. He may die.

Finally, a herd of cattle was driven from the slaughter-house with a view of begulling the two beasts. One of them mingled with the herd, but the other kept his distance. He was pursued to the meadows, where he was mired and killed. As is usually the case, no one knows who owned the animals, and it is hard to find out, therefore, who is responsible for the damage. **ROBBED IN CENTRAL PARK.**

A Stranger's Adventure With a Footpad. (New York Times.)

The danger of rambling through Central Park during the late bours was forcibly impressed upon the police authorities by the experience of Alvin L. Smith, a visitor from Nebraska, who was shot and robbed by a highwayman in the Park on Sunday night. Mr. Smith is a well-to-do business-man of Falls City, Neb., where he keeps a corriage-factory. He is about thirty-nwe years of age and is married. Tall and of fine physique, he is more than a match for an ordinary assailant. He came East to visit his relatives in New Humpshire and bits wife's folks in Boston. On Thursday night he arrived in this city from Boston and put up at the Härlem House, a large lodging-house at Third avenue and One-Hundred-and-Fifteenthistreet, Saturday was spent by him in a visit to the Central Park, and he paid it a second visit on Sunday, spending the afternoon and evening there.

The beautiful night tempted him to prolong his stay there, and he was strolling through its moonlit walks until nearly midnight. He was on the Ramble at that hour, near the circle which opens into the Eastern Drive, at about Seventy-ninth Eastern Drive, at about Seventy-ninth.

through its moonlik walks until nearly midnight. He was on the Ramble at that hour, near the circle which opens into the Eastern Drive, at about Seventy-ninth street and Fifth avenue. He looked at his watch, and, finding the bour so late, concluded to make his way out of the Park and return home. The path before him was in the full moonlight, but he had gone only a few steps when the light was obscured by the trees overhead. While he was in darkness a man suddenly strange. tion. As a rule the foreign and they went home singing there are some colleging and very quiet. You diver scarped to be fails. It is an old Swabian town, and said to be less changed than any other. There are some curious old freeze do houses there. One, the "Knight's," land Marcus Curtius plunging into the gap; Virtue, Fortitude, Chastity, and other figures say well as coats-of-arms, and the motto, "I speak for My Country" in Greek and Latin. Another house had figures from the Trojan war, Achilles, Agamennon, Paris Offering an Apple to Helen, and Dido and Æneas at a period when love was "all in all." A third house had a procession of people recorting a wicked ruler, who was being carried in an iron cage, in which it is said he was kept till starved to death. These houses date back 469 years, but have receined, and several delectives expecially delive the religible of the lordly Swabians, who disdained to walk down to their horses, and had then brought up to their room and ons instead.
